Learning Sight Words Activity

Learning to read includes memorizing sight words - basic words children will see again and again when they read. Making this a fun, visual activity will engage your beginning reader and increase their reading success. Click here to download your free Learning Sight Words Activity Sheet. We have also comprised a list of sight words from the two most popular lists, Dolch and Fry, to get your visual learner reading with confidence. Download them below.

Vocabulary & Spelling Words

All through elementary school, kids will be assigned lists of vocabulary words to memorize. To ensure success, match the style of practice to your child's learning style. Visual kids learn best by making the words into pictures they can remember. So get out the notecards, colored markers and make the vocabulary words visual. ## Story Paper

Visual thinkers have a lot of ideas happening all the time- but the ideas are pictures inside their head. Writing requires them to translate their images into words and get them on paper. A great way to help them translate those images into words is to have them start by drawing a picture. Click here to download your free Story Paper.

Morning Charts for Boys and Girls

One of the ways we help our young kids develop their own internal order is through visual cues that help them move along independently. Clean, visual cues with words help your child develop internal order and allow you to have an easier morning routine. ## Bedtime Charts for Boys and Girls

Using lists and charts empowers children to act independently, lessens power struggles and discipline issues, while building a child's confidence and sense of self. Young children and visual learners are more successful when things are written in pictures. ## Drawer Labels

Organization is important for children and adults alike. But, it is essential for right-brain dominant thinkers that struggle with internal order. I have created some adorable labels for you or your child to put on their drawers so they can easily keep their clothes organized and maybe even help put away their own laundry.
